Your local pain management service have referred you to the Scottish National Pain Management Programme (SNPMP). The team will contact you to arrange an appointment for an assessment.

What happens at the assessment?

Members of the team will have a conversation with you to hear more about your pain and the impact it has had on you. We will explore what you might be hoping for from an intensive pain management programme. The assessment process may happen over more than one appointment. The appointments will be video calls. We can also arrange in-person appointments.

You may want to have a discussion with your family, friends or your employer to make sure that you can take this time for yourself to commit to a 3 week in-person programme or 5 week virtual programme.

Is there anything I can do to prepare for my assessment?

It can be helpful to think about what you might be hoping for from a pain management programme. It also might be helpful to think of any questions or concerns you have.

In preparation for the assessment it could be useful to reflect on how your pain has:

- Affected your quality of life
- Impacted on activities that are important and enjoyable to you
- Affected your independence
- Affected your confidence
- Affected your mood and well-being
